*June 2003

My collection of John Hersey first editions began after finding Hiroshima in a used bookstore in early 1986, and it wasn't completed until late 2002 because, although not rare, a number of them are hard to find. Hersey died in 1993, and the twenty-nine books in this collection represent all of his hardback book output. The only book without a dust jacket is Hersey's first book, and that has been extremely difficult to find in an acceptable condition.

Hersey was born in Tientsin, China, in 1914 to missionary parents and learned to speak Chinese before English. They returned to the United States in 1924. After education at Yale and Cambridge (as a Mellon Fellow), he joined the staff of Time in 1937.

During World War II, Hersey was a war correspondent whose assignments ranged over China, Guadalcanal, Sicily, Moscow, and Japan. The success of his "fictional novels" on contemporary history won him a Pulitzer Prize (1945). After the 1950s, Hersey concentrated on novel writing. In the 1960s, his theme was overcoming racial injustice, in the 1970s, it was reversing scandal in the highest government offices. In the 1980s, it was addressing educational inadequacies, and in the 1990s, it was the challenge of AIDS.

Hersey is an example of a high-minded, dedicated, and contrarian American writer that one is challenged to find an equal of today. When future readers select important books that reflect American society in the later part of the twentieth century, it would not be surprising to find several of Hersey's books included.
